(TODAY: This is part of a series of articles on the challenges that first-year business management students face in their studies today. And if you're thinking of becoming a business management student in the fall, the image at the top of this post should give you an idea of how small your study group will likely be — and that's before you've even made it to campus!)

————— Financial Times – How the world's most unequal country is changing faster than China, Dec. 1, 2018 In a world of rising nationalism and populist governments, the United States remains by far the most unequal and diverse country.

The US federal budget deficit has passed the US$1tn (£749bn) threshold, reaching its third straight year of trillion-dollar deficits. Deficits have increased as a share of GDP and federal spending have declined as a share of GDP. More than 20m Americans, or 5% of the population, received benefits in 2017. Since 1965, government spending has increased by an average of 3.5% per year in real terms. Tax revenues are only now rising after decades of decline. It is now more than 50 years since the country had a balanced budget. CNBC – The five trends businesses will face in 2020, Feb. 21, 2019 The year 2020 will likely prove to be one of the biggest and most exciting years in recent business history. As you consider the trends that are likely to emerge over the next 12 months, consider three of them to be of the most pressing importance. Metsima: Pursuing Global Opportunities, Feb. 11, 2019 As we embark on another year of global uncertainty, it is crucial to take a step back to view the trends, dynamics and shifts in the economy and society that will affect the US business environment over the next year and beyond. I-Report: A new frontier of environmental issues facing the tech industry, Dec. 1, 2018 As the world's largest technology companies scramble to meet growing consumer demand for sustainability and ethical products, their efforts may be futile. As corporate giants like Google, Amazon and Microsoft build their brands on the premise that their products are the most ethical, companies are increasingly concerned about their market share and any related bad publicity. As a result, they are being pressured to change their business practices. For example, Google has stopped selling solar-powered 82157476af
